

What if Boston's most vulnerable children received Boston's most innovative pediatric care?

URBAN CHILD & HEALTHY FAMILY

What if pediatric care addressed the social and medical needs of every child?

Economic status, housing, education and food security all have critical impact on children's health. The Center works with families, communities and medical providers to build and evaluate programs that systematically address the full range of factors impacting children's health.

What if research-based innovation became real-world practice faster?

It takes 17 years, on average, to integrate proven clinical innovation into real-world practice. That's long enough to miss a generation of children in need. The Center improves collaboration between pediatric and adult primary care providers, subspecialists across disciplines and researchers to deliver innovative pediatric care faster.

Zip code should not predict a child's health.

For Boston's most impoverished children and families the current system of providing medical care isn't working. The BMC Center for the Urban Child and Healthy Family was founded to bring fundamental change to delivering pediatric care to Boston's most vulnerable children and families.
